Law School Preparation

Are you Interested in law school? Most law schools recommend that undergraduate students major in a good liberal arts degree such as History, English Literature or Philosophy. Also, taking a course in logic is important. One third of the LSAT test is based on logic & reasoning.

There are many questions to ask including:
- Why do I want to become a lawyer?
- What types of law practice interest me?
- How do I choose which law schools to apply to?
- When and where is the LSAT offered?
- How do I prepare for the LSAT?
- What is the application timeline?

Events

Consider attending Law School fairs, where many school typically represent their programs. You can often find them by Google searching law school fairs in (your area). Alternatively, many individual law schools also host information nights where you can learn more about a specific school's program and admissions process. Finally, be sure to look for virtual fairs, where you can chat with an admissions representative right from your living room!

Website Resources:
- Law School Admissions Council: www.LSAC.org
- ThoughtCo's: Required Courses for Law School
- The Princeton Review: http://www.princetonreview.com/
- US News and World Report Law School Rankings

TIPS

TIP #1
Contact the admissions officials of the schools you are interested in early in your search. They may host information/visit sessions and will be the best contacts regarding requirements, prerequisites, etc.

TIP #2
Reach out to current students and alumni of the programs you are interested in to get a honest evaluation of the program.

TIP #3
Use websites such as: LSAC.org,, Kaplan, Magoosh, LSATMax, 7Sage, etc. to take practice LSAT exams.